1. Build your own Phone

How many mobile phones have you had in your life and what do you do with the old, broken ones? Most people throw them away. In fact, digital waste is a growing problem for society. Dutch designer Dave Hakken has come up with an amazing idea to reduce such waste. The Phoneblocks concept is a mobile phone made up of little blocks that can be replaced when they stop working. This means that you can keep your phone forever and just replace the broken parts. You can also build the ideal phone for your personal needs. The designer is trying to spread the word about his idea. His goal is to find 50,000 supporters so that the mobile phone industry will take notice.

3. Back to the 80's

A Canadian family has decided to spend a year living as if it was 1986. Blair McMillan was concerned that his kids spent too much time indoors with technology. He wanted them to experience what it was like when he was growing up. That means no I-pods, mobile phones or Internet. If they need information, they have to go to the library and look up an encyclopedia. For entertainment, they have a VHS player to watch movies and cassette tapes to listen to. When travelling, they use only paper maps and have to wait to have their photos developed. The family dress in vintage clothes and have 80's hairdos (...). So far, Blair says his family talk more and are much closer.
